Correct answer: Photo Courtesy: Jessie Casson/DigitalVision/Getty Images Nowadays, technology gives many people the extraordinary ability to work from home, an advantage that proved even more crucial than ever during the COVID-19 pandemic. Aside from global trauma, teleworking has always been an environmentally friendly option, largely unused until 2020. It keeps cars off the road and gives workers greater freedom and flexibility in carrying out their work, increasing their productivity and job satisfaction. Many jobs now allow employees to work from home for all or part of the work week, but if you're interested in a job that always lets you work from home without worrying about going back to an office routine one day, you're in luck. To find the right job-from-home, make sure you're applying for jobs with legitimate companies, rather than companies that promote questionable methods claim that they will make you rich. When you're ready to take a serious look, start with some of the most trusted companies offering legitimate jobs from home. If you're like a lot of people, you probably do a lot of shopping on Amazon these days. Why not work there instead? Amazon has a wide range of remote and virtual jobs, and many of them include some enjoyable benefits. For years, most of Amazon's work-from-home positions were customer service jobs. This is still one of your options, but a lot of other opportunities are now available to work for Amazon from home. Photo Courtesy: Jim Young/Bloomberg/Getty Images From transcription tasks that power Alexa to delivery jobs and engineering and marketing positions, Amazon offers a wide range of premium roles to play from home. Chances are better than ever that you can find a job you'll love that also fits your skills. When you think about jobs that allow you to work from home, call center jobs probably pop up most often. Liveops is a leader in call center job opportunities. This company treats its operators like freelancers, so in a way, you're your own boss. Liveops gives you the opportunity to work from home or anywhere else that is quiet. Photo Courtesy: Westend61/Getty Images The cloud-based call center works with hundreds of companies, making it easy to find a job from home in an industry you're interested in. From taking food orders to help blocked motorists answer insurance questions, you can take advantage of a ton of opportunities to check your program and your niche when working for Liveops. You know the name Dell from his computers and probably from his stupid commercials a few years ago, but did you know that company is working to increase the number of employees working from home? If you're tech savvy, you might find a job with Dell that allows you to work remotely. Photo courtesy of: 10&A000 10&A000 Images Existing employees praise Dell's leadership for its commitment to work-life balance, and the company's remote work opportunities are ideal if you want to work in software engineering, customer service or sales. While Dell continues to strive to hire employees who want to work from home, chances are good you can find a position that is right for you if you have one of these skill sets. If you are looking for a job in the healthcare industry that allows you to work from home on your own program, you definitely want to check out the offers at UnitedHealth Group. UnitedHealth provides health insurance benefits to companies along with Medicare and Medicaid options, and offers a lot of teleworking jobs to manage all of the related management responsibilities of those networks. Photo Courtesy: Justin Paget/DigitalVision/Getty Images Some of the jobs offered by UnitedHealth Group are in real health fields, such as nurses and behavioral health specialists, but many are sales, support and coaching activities that allow you to work remotely. As you might expect, a health insurance company offers great benefits to its teleworking employees. One of the most innovative niche companies in our technology economy is the virtual assistant. Many companies provide virtual assistants for executives and companies, and Boldly is a leader among them. It offers competitive pay, paid leave, paid parental leave and plenty of flexibility. Photo Courtesy: Morsa Images/DigitalVision/Getty Images With Boldly, you can work from home as an executive assistant, paralegal or social media specialist. The company offers training and mentorship and works diligently to pair you with a business that is a good fit. Best of all, you're a W-2 employee and not an independent contractor. This means you qualify for some benefits, and tax time is generally less of a hassle. If you've ever been interested in teaching or tutoring kids online, VIPKid offers a great opportunity to make that dream come true. Based in China, the company provides online tutors for students learning to speak English. You need a degree and some formal or informal teaching experience, but VIPKid provides you with all the material you need to teach children once you are hired. Photo Courtesy: Westend61/Getty Images One of the biggest advantages of VIPKid is the relatively high pay for a tutoring concert, typically between $14 and $22 an hour, with additional incentives at certain times of the year. Another advantage is the ability to create your own program. In addition to the required credentials, you need to undergo a video interview to determine if you have the personality for with children, but otherwise it's a relatively simple process to join the company. Photo Courtesy: @turbotax/Twitter Instead of looking for an accountant who handles all taxes and potentially paying a high fee for the privilege, you can use TurboTax to Federal and state tax files. TurboTax is available both online and as a CD or downloadable product, making it accessible to anyone. To get started, you'll answer basic questions about your income and life to determine which credits and deductions you might be eligible. Once the taxes are complete and the returns have been accepted by the IRS, you can simply wait for your return or make a payment through the TurboTax website as required. To start using TurboTax, go to the TurboTax website and create an account. Once you're in, you'll answer basic questions about your income, if you have children, if you own or rent, and if you've made charitable donations in the past year. You'll be guided through every interview question as you go. Photo courtesy: @turbotax/Twitter You have a choice of two different forms of TurboTax to use for storage purposes. The first is TurboTax Online, which requires a computer or mobile device with internet access. You don't need to download any software to get started, making TurboTax Online an efficient choice for preparing and filing tax returns electronically. Once you give TurboTax your information, it is stored securely on the company's servers. This is the company's most popular option for tax preparation. TurboTax Online helps you prepare and e-file your federal tax return for free, although preparing a state tax return has a cost. There may also be a fee if the fees are more complex (for example, if you own a business) or if you use one of the more advanced versions of TurboTax. These include Deluxe, Premier and Self-Employed, which can help maximize tax deductions or manage more complex finances. You can also use TurboTax CD/Download, which allows you to download TurboTax to your computer. Since this method does not require an internet connection, you can work on fees without internet access, and the information will be saved on your hard drive. The basic plan still requires a tax for state income taxes, but all other plans come with a free state. Another advantage of the TurboTax CD/Download package is that it allows you to prepare and print as many federal tax returns as you want, making it a better value overall for preparing tax returns for different people. With the exception of a computer or mobile device to do your tax preparation and deposit, you don't need much else to start using TurboTax beyond your email address. The information is saved as you proceed through the interview, so you can stop and resume the questions at your convenience. Photo courtesy: @turbotax/Twitter The process starts with various questions about your life, such as your marital status, income, if you have children and if you have any a change of life in the last year, like divorce. There's a good chance you won't need your W-2 or 1099, as TurboTax imports that information from over a million financial institutions and employers. If your tax situation is not soHowever, if you own a small business, you may need other documents, such as a mortgage statement, charitable contributions, medical expenses, and company data. Each TurboTax session starts with some basic questions about your life, including your job, income and if you have children. Depending on your answers, TurboTax may ask for more information or move on to the next question. For example, if you have children, TurboTax will ask for information about them to determine if you can receive applicable deductions and credits, including the child care tax credit. Photo Courtesy: @turbotax/Twitter Although the tax code changes often from year to year, TurboTax's Certified Public Accountants (CPA) update the company's products as needed to ensure you get the most relevant credits and deductions every year. You can start monitoring your refund once you have been notified that the refund has been accepted. Generally you can expect to wait between 24 and 48 hours from the time you e-file the fees for your return to be accepted by the IRS. From there, the average waiting time to get the refund approved by the tax office is two days. The average waiting time for the refund to be sent or deposited after this is 19 days. Photo Courtesy: @turbotax/Twitter If it's been more than 21 days since the return was accepted but you haven't received your refund yet, it's time to contact IRS. As long as you have internet access, you can track your refund using the "Where's My Refund?" website. website.
